A Modern Bachelor's Soliloquy.

To wed, or not to wed, that is the question ; Whether 'tis wiser in a man to banish The tempting visions of domestic comfort, Or to lead some damsels of our time to the altar, And, by marriage, end them? To wed? to doubt No more ; and by that act to say we end The heartache and the thousand well-planned tricks Of enterprising mother !- 'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wished. To wed, to enrich The traffeeman, and to feed bad servants ! To wed, perchance, a spendthrift?-aye; there's the

For to what sort of wife we may be mated When we have shuffled off our bachelorhood, Must give us pause. There's the respect That makes celibacy of so much practice : For who would bear the impatient thirst for bluss, The yearnings for some gentle confidant, The amatory frenzies of one's loneliness. The less of buttons and large joints of meat, When he himself might his quietus make With a bare wedding ring? Who would lodging bear, To groan and sweat under extortionate landladies, But that the dread of helpless and expensive wives-Those prodigies of modern training-puzzles the will, And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than hazard being thus ta'en in and done for. Thus women do make cowards of us all : And thus the hopeful heart of many a bachelor Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought, And enterprises of good will and spirit With this regard from marriage turn away, And lose the name of husband. LEX.
